Donation Supports Literacy at Crestview Elementary School

– Trane Makes $1,000 Contribution to School Reading Program –

Indianapolis, Ind., March 11, 2010 – Crestview Elementary School in Indianapolis, Ind., will soon start a new chapter in their reading program with the receipt of a $1,000 contribution. Trane in Indiana is donating the funds to demonstrate its commitment to literacy and learning for the community's young people. The company also wants to encourage other businesses to support their local schools, especially in these challenging economic times.

Details of the check presentation:

Administrators at Crestview will receive the contribution on Friday, March 12, in a ceremony at the school.

- Tim Garver, district direct sales manager, Trane, will present the award to Tom Linkmeyer, principal, Crestview Elementary at 9:30 a.m. on March 12 at Crestview Elementary School, located at the corner of 71st Street and Hague Road in Indianapolis, Ind.
- Michael McQuillen, a member of Indianapolis city council, also will speak at the ceremony. Other local community leaders will be invited to attend the event.

"This contribution will help us expand our reading program to more fully meet the needs and learning styles of all our students," said Tom Linkmeyer, principal. "It will further our ability to assist students in building the key literacy skills that pave the way for their future success."

"In these uncertain economic times, we know that schools are stretching their resources tighter than ever," said Tim Garver, district direct sales manager, Trane. "We hope that this contribution will help Crestview Elementary instill a passion for reading in all its students."
